I Once Breathed the Fire of Dragons (2005)

I once breathed the fire of Dragons
With the thirst of a warrior true
And my heart was charged with rage
I was the instrument of death and mayhem
That brought fear to the souls of my enemies

For I once breathed the fire of Dragons
And in my rage conquered dreams and ideas
But I was lost, until I drank the silence of the world
I was invisible until I sensed the reason for existence
And then, did my blade become dull and my will confused

For I once breathed the fire of Dragons
That tested my lust for life and engulfed my sanity
With a rainbow of idealistic dreams called nightmares
And to this day, when night becomes a blanket of fear
I thank God, that I have evolved from whence I came

For I once breathed the fire of Dragons
And I learned from the hardships of life to endure
To look forward, vice the place, where war was the answer
To a place where once I starved my soul for honor
Crouching from reality, as I plunged my dagger deep

For I once breathed the fire of Dragons
and now my heart seeks tolerance and peace despite the bloodstained sword of valor, I stand erect
I have tasted and enjoyed the flavor of peace
I have made friendships with existence and devotion

For I once breathed the fire of Dragons
And unbeknown to me, being passive made me stronger
And I learned the value of friendship and trust
Casting down my instruments of war and death
Flinging to the wind my cavlaw shield and helmet
To build nations with ideals and peace, without the wars
For I once breathed the fire of Dragons
