Migration History

The interviewer should begin this line of questioning as follows: We would like to know about the different places you have lived. Where were you born? How long was it before you moved away from that place? Who lived with you there?

Continue this line of questioning until you have covered ten moves or the person's complete migration history, whichever comes first. If a radical change in household composition takes place, record that as a separate T, keeping the location constant, but changing dates and household code.

Coding Instructions: Use place codes for first place (e.g. where born) followed by second place (e.g. where family moved after birth-place) on same line. Then enter date (month/year) when the subject was born, followed on next line by date of first move. Continue, using second place code for first place code on T2.

This is an example of coding layout, using 2-and-4-digit codes for data points.
